

THE TRAGEDY OF THE SEA.

MATE BRAM WISHED TO THROW THE THREE VICTIMS OVERBOARD.

He Is the Only One of the Arrested Seamen Who Will Not Talk—His Old Employer Tells The Story of the Crime and the Accused's Competent Man—One Victim Buried

HALIFAX, July 22.—The excitement occasioned yesterday by the news of the triple murder on the barkentine Herbert Fuller has not been abated. The streets around the police station were thronged with people to witness the second mate, August Blamberg, was buried at Camp Hill Cemetery to-day. The bodies of Capt. Nash and his wife have been sealed up and await the arrival of the dead Captain's brother, who is expected here to-night.

Mr. Frank, the brother of the dead mate, two or three days after the murders he and Charles Spencer, the colored steward, looked for the Captain's revolver, which, up to that time could not be found. They searched the chart in the Captain's room, in which Monk had been sleeping, and it was found underneath the mattress. It was loaded when they found it, and Spencer took it to protect himself against any further outbreak. Monk had his own revolver. Both Monk and Spencer seemed to gain in each other's confidence, and they worked together. Spencer kept close watch on all that was going on.

Spencer was very suspicious of Mate Braman, and he frequently told Monk of it. Monk says that the mate was very cool all through the whole affair. Bram suggested that the cabin and room be brown overhauled, and the walls and room be cleaned out. But this Spencer and Monk declined to allow. After the bodies had been removed from the rooms Monk locked the doors and told

The man, who was only one of the crew who was kept his mouth closed. When questioned he said that the prisoners were kept at the station, particularly at the work strain on them.

At 11 A.M. the hour at which the Ministry announced the inquiry would begin the man again announced that Inquiry Minister Finn's representative would that the inquiry would not be proceeded with today.

He said that he was there that Finn was at one time a member of the Franklin street Methodist Episcopal church in New York city.

At 12:30 P.M. the man, Monk, arrived at the court to fight from Boston.

He was taken to the court station, where he was held in his cell sweated him out. The two were in a room for their vacation for a long time. Their meeting was held at 1:30 P.M.

TROTTING AND PACING.

Hot Finishes at Detroit—Billy C. Farnish's Surprise.

DETROIT, July 22.—A heavy rain shortly before noon to-day left the track at Grosse Pointe in poor shape. The sun came out about 1 o'clock, however, and by 4 o'clock the track was in excellent condition. The great American stake was on to-day's card, but on account of the condition of the track it was placed last on the program. As usual, the spectators were

In the 2:10 trot Bessie Wilton and Derby Princess were about equal favorites, but the latter won with lots to spare. In the 2:14 pace, the favorite was Red Oak, the favorite after the first heat. It took eight heats to decide the 2:14 pace, and every heat was a race from start to finish. In the 2:14 pace, Red Oak made a great rush in the stretch and beat out Simmons by a head. Hall Cloud and Simmons made the racing in the second heat all the time, but in the driving finish Simmons won by a nose in 2:10 1/4.

Billy C. was the surprise for the talent in the third heat, which also was a sensational finish. Red Oak was the favorite, but he was out of it although Billy C. gave the bay mare a hot argue-

He Woodhead was the favorite, but lost the first two heats. He seemed to have a neck from the wire, and he and Stittie he made a great race with crafty, and was only a neck behind the latter at the wire. The second heat was a close race, and secured for the work. The 2 to 2 race that Allen Barn would have won was a close race, and secured for the fourth heat. HE SAVED HIS CHILD.

Builder Rankin's Thrilling Experience in a Mill Flame.

A despatch published yesterday in the Brooklyn Times tells of the narrow escape from drowning of a little daughter of Mr. Rankin, a builder of Brooklyn, in a mill dam at Huntington, L. I. Mr. Rankin took his wife, daughter, and a woman friend out rowing on Tuesday afternoon, Tuesday.

"Unconscious of danger, Mr. Rankin allowed the boat to drift along directly toward the mill race. Mrs. Rankin heard the sound of rushing water, and remarked to her husband:

that there might be danger near at hand. He was a quiet, reserved man, and took up the oars to row the boat far from the shore, and then he pushed it into the current which shot across the opening in the sluiceway. Instantly the boat was carried down the current, and he was up and away. In spite of the efforts of Rankin to draw the boat to the corner of the stone wall, the boat was driven on, and Rankin saw that nothing could prevent the boat from being turned over when it struck the gates. Rankin tried to tell the others to steer toward the gates and hold on.

When the boat struck it was upset, and all were thrown into the water. Mr. Rankin and the lady were the last to get out, and the boat was turned over. The gates, but the child missed, and was swept out of sight. She had been carried under the gates, and Rankin saw that she was gone. He turned and ran into the tideway to look for his child when he struck his foot against a moving object under the water. He felt it was a person and found the girl held under water by her hair, which had caught in the woodwork of the gates. He seized hold of her braid and tore it loose. She came up and he helped her to the mill pond. Bantka is an expert swimmer, and after being carried out into the pond some distance he managed to get out of the tideway and back to shore. He then assisted the ladies to the bridge above the gates. They were nearly exhausted and could not have held on much longer."

meditated character of the killing. The prosecution will close to-morrow and the defence will open.

Reel has but few witnesses, and his lawyer will endeavor to show that he killed his wife in a sudden fit of rage at her determination to leave him. The prosecution has made out a strong case against the accused.
